For learning about Photoshop and some of its features, look for tutorials at . # Selecting and Copying the Background With a few minutes of Photoshop work, you can transform an image into a completely different one. Selecting and copying the background (the portion of the image containing a solid, unchanging color) can significantly improve an image by reducing its busy look and make it look like it was taken on a different subject. In this exercise, you'll use the Copy Background feature to create several separate layers for inserting the background of several photographs of the same topic. After you have the layers created, you'll use the Move Tool to place the new layers on the image. You'll then select and copy the background from one layer to another. ## Creating Layers In the following exercise, you'll create six layers from one image. The image that you'll use for this exercise is the 'cat and rat' image that you find on the DVD (refer to Figure 5-3 for a description of this image). Before you begin, load the 'cat and rat.jpg' image into the image window. 1. With the Move Tool, click the background of the image. The Background contextual tab appears at the bottom of the Layers palette. 2. From the Layers palette, choose Layers => New Layer. A new layer appears in the Layers palette. 3. Click the right arrow next to the Background layer in the Layers palette and then the green box next to the arrow to close the layer. The Background layer is closed, and all of the other layers from the original image remain. You're ready to begin inserting the background on the new layers. 4. Click the Add Layer Mask icon (see Figure5-7 ) just below the layers in the Layers palette. This icon, a squiggly line with a circle (the mask inside the circle) inside, appears only when you create a new layer. After you close a layer, the icon disappears. You use layer masks to hide or protect parts of the new layer from changes in the image. 5. With the background layer still selected (highlight it in the Layers palette), press D to deselect it. Only one layer is open.

Russia's President Vladimir Putin has refused to take part in an unscheduled phone call with US President Barack Obama in the wake of the US-led NATO airstrikes against a convoy of Russian tanks and other military vehicles outside of the eastern town of Ghunib. The Obama administration had attempted to organize a phone call to the Russian leader after the failed air raid on Syria on Wednesday. The call was meant to coordinate a ceasefire and jointly address the situation in the country. Putin's spokesman Dmitry Peskov said that the Kremlin had received a "specific request" to hold the call on Thursday, which was not answered. When asked if the US administration conveyed the offer to the Kremlin earlier on Thursday, Peskov replied that the Russian leader is "entitled to work out his own strategy" regarding the crisis in Syria and that "the messages he receives are appreciated." The US sent two B-52 bombers over Syria hours after the attack against the convoy, which left at least 25 people dead. The move prompted the Kremlin to cancel a planned call with Obama on Thursday, with the White House later saying that it will be prepared to meet with Putin "at a time and place of his choosing." The US and Russia are now in a strategic stand-off, with Obama threatening that if Russia does not get out of Syria he will start hitting the country with "targeted and precise" attacks against weapons caches, command and control facilities, and air defense systems. The US president will deliver a televised address on the situation in Syria early Thursday evening. Russia has been supporting Syria's president Bashar Assad in the country's civil war, which started with anti-government protests in 2011. After months of negotiations, Assad reached a tacit agreement with the US to turn over Syria's chemical weapons arsenal to international control. - You have 3 e-mails ready to send, and you want to send them all at once- You don't want to wait for the third to complete after the second has returned. - You want to use a file destination, not a mail dialog. - You have lots of addresses, so why type them all in again? - You want more features for auto-completion or other info.
